PUBLIC ESTIMATION.
We, the undersigned, residents of Sing Sing, Westchester County, N. Y., certify that we have used E. FARMER'S PILLS, the Vegetable Universal Medicine, individually, and in our families, and have found them the best medicine we ever used. We believe them to be deserving of all confidence, by the public at large. We have seen the most beneficial effects from their use, in diseases generally considered of an opposite character. In no case have we seen, or heard, of any injury from their use; but on the contrary, the most decided benefits.

Miscellaneous.
THE FIRST PRIZE
Or the Yankee Merchantman.
BY CAPT. BOLTHOPE.

It was on a warm and sultry afternoon in the tropics, that a clean built, rakish looking brig, out of the Baltimore model, was slowly foaming her way over the bosom of the broad Atlantic on her homeward bound voyage.

The sun was just about quenching its fiery heat, beneath the blue waves of the ocean, throwing one last bright glare over the immense expanse of water.

All was quiet on board the White Cloud, the hands had knocked off from their work, every sail was set that could catch a breath of wind, and the long tapering of the yards were trimmed with a beautiful precision that gave evidence of skill and judgment, in the man who commanded her, whom we shall take by the hand and introduce to the reader by the name of Capt. Ben Bobsaw.

Capt. Bobsaw was a very large muscular man, of fifty years of age, and was cool, determined, powerful and experienced.

His mate was a young man, a native of Maine; but who, in addition to the natural enterprise and go-ahead-attitude of the Yankee character, had received the advantages of a liberal collegiate education, at a time when his family were in wealthy circumstances, a position which they had lost by the fraud and machinations of those who professed the most disinterested friendship for them. At the age of twenty-one Robert Renshaw found himself penniless, the only support of his widowed, affectionate and almost heart broken mother.

Disguised at the duplicity and faithlessness of his former companions, the proud and sensitive youth, now proud because of his poverty because almost a misanthrope he visited nowhere, shunned society, and felt alone in the world. In this mode of mind, he suddenly formed the intention of following the sea, as it is called, and shipped on board of a vessel bound for the East Indies.

At the time that our story opens Robert Renshaw was twenty-six years of age, he had travelled much, and had stowed his mind with a variety of practical and useful knowledge, which he every day found of immense utility to him. By a judicious disposition of various adventures which he had made from time to time on his voyages, he had acquired sufficient property to place his beloved mother in comfortable circumstances beyond the reach of want.

As we before stated the sun was just setting, brightening the horizon with its last rays, when all hands on board the brig were just about to be dismissed by the cry of sail ho! from the mainmast.

"Where away?" said the captain.
"Four points on the weather bow, sir," replied the main.

"I can't see closely, sir, but should judge she was a large two-masted schooner, very quick and with a great speed of canvas."

"Mr. Renshaw! take this glass, jump up in the rigging, and see what you can make of her, sir."

"Aye, aye, sir," and away went the mate up the rigging to the main-topmast cross-tree. After a long and steady look he confirmed the report of the "look-out," and gave it as his opinion that she was an armed craft.

"She must have us, sir," said the mate, "for she has turned her course and is standing for us."

"Very well!" replied the Captain, "with no more wind than there is now, he could not come to us before twelve o'clock, there is no moon to-night, and I do not think that it will breeze up any, so we have plenty of time to prepare, if it should prove to be our enemy."

"Yes, sir," said Renshaw, "but she may have sweeps!"

"True! I did not think of that! But then these Mexicans would be too lazy to use them if she has, unless it is to run away with!"

Night fell, and a thick mackerel sky gradually overspread the whole heavens, shutting out every star and betokening a lively breeze for the next day.

"I have a proposition to make if you please, sir," said Renshaw, addressing the Captain. "Out with it, sir."

"It is this:—we have no craft of that build in our navy, neither have the English or French, she must be a Mexican or a private, in either case she is well worth taking, the night is dark, let me take the boat and eight men well armed, you will have the second mate, cook, steward and two men on board the brig. I will board the schooner in the dark, they will not suspect such a thing, and I hope to carry her by surprise."

Captain Bobsaw pondered a few moments and finally replied—"well this brig and cargo are mine, I am responsible to no one. Go ahead."

In a few minutes Renshaw followed by eight able men, athletic Yankee sailors, armed to the teeth, and eager for the fun, was pulling away in the large well-muffled oars, in the direction where the schooner was last seen. As soon as she felt the side, Captain Bobsaw took all sail but the main and foretopsails, which he lowered on their caps, hauled out the reef-tackles, hauled out the buntlines and rounded through the slack of the clewlines, he then braced up sharp, put the brig on the wind and laid his main top-sail to the mast, lashed his helm a-lee, armed the rest of his men except the cook, got out his other boat and pushed off in the wake of his mate, leaving the vessel in charge of the cook, who had been a long time with him.

Renshaw, in the meantime, perfectly unconscious of the intention of his captain, pulled silently and expeditiously for the schooner, the dim outlines of which in a short time he saw gradually nearing him.

"A vast pulling! lay on your oars and let him come, the flash of your oars in the water may discover us."

The looms of the oars were tucked under the rigging, and every man loosened his cutlass and shook the priming of his pistols.

In a short time, Renshaw, who spoke the Spanish language fluently, could hear the voice of the watch on board the schooner, threatening "Muerte los Malditos Yankees," or "death to the infernal Yankees," and congratulating themselves on this chance of "Cortando sus pesquitos," or cutting their throats.

As she was moving but slowly over the waters, Renshaw thought it advisable to board over the stern, which would once give him command over the quarter deck, and the officers, too great an advantage to be lost. In consequence he let her glide past, keeping just under the shadow of her bows without touching, and counting her ports as she slid by, six ports were counted with the following muzzles of her guns projecting, finally the Mexican standard with the Eagle standing on the cactus and holding the serpent, turned his lazy looks to his keen gaze.

"Now lads, caution and courage is the word."

According to a preconcerted arrangement, the bowman put his boat hook to the gunnel of the Mexican boat, hanging to the davits, and held on, being towed by the schooner, while Renshaw's men carefully and silently deposited their oars on the thwarts of their boat. Luckily the schooner like most others of her class, had no cabin windows in the stern. Renshaw himself quietly climbed up the staff of the boat-hook the man was holding into the small boat above him, taking the painter of his own in his teeth. He arrived safely without creating alarm, being sheltered from observation by the taffrail and round-house of the schooner, made fast the end of his painter, and in a few moments was joined by his men. He then raised his head above the taffrail and saw the man at the wheel and two officers leaning over the weather-side of the quarter rail. Silently he advanced followed by his men, one of whom stunned the helmsman by a blow delivered in true natural style, under his ear. In a minute more the two officers found themselves at the bottom of the cabin stairs, having performed sundry evolutions and convolutions in arriving at this terminus; half stunned, bruised, and in no way able to account for the manner of their getting there. Their first impulse was to rush on deck, but their progress was suddenly stopped by the companion hatch which was hauled over and barred down.

In the meantime, our hero, at the head of his little crew pushed boldly forward into the waist, conquering all before him in their surprise, and would doubtless have succeeded in carrying the schooner by this coup de main, as bold as it was well conceived, had the officer in command forward not heard the disturbance, and at a glance seen that the schooner was boarded.

Hastily summoning his crew which was now diminished to some twenty-five men, since ten of them had been thrown overboard by the impetuous Americans, and five officers locked up in the cabin without means of egress, he made a furious charge and the intrepid little band now presented a small but solid front to their assailants.

The Yankees fought like tigers, making sad havoc with their enemies, whom nothing but their immense numerical superiority and the courage of their leader kept to their work. But overborn with numbers they gradually gave ground.

The Mexican officer with some of his men had dragged one of his bow chains from its port loading it with grape and canister, and was about pointing it on our little band of ring, a gigantic form was seen coming over the bows followed by several others.

With one whoop of his herculean arm he headed the cannon, who was about to apply the match, rolled on the deck, another sent the gallant officer to his last account, while the men who followed him, attacked like furies in the rear of the astonished and panic-stricken Mexicans: the surviving ones of whom immediately ran below, when the hatches were hauled over them and secured.

In half an hour more Captain Bobsaw who had this most opportunely come to the rescue of his gallant mate, was in possession of the Mexican Privateer El Volador, or the Flying Fish. Upon searching, nearly two hundred thousand dollars were found on board of her; funds sent by the Mexican government to Havana to aid in the purchase of ammunition for carrying on the war.

In ten days the brig arrived in Charleston with her prize, which was condemned and sold, so with the prize money, and lawful booty our hero found himself at the end of his cruise, worth nearly forty thousand dollars.

Being comparatively wealthy, he married a young lady to whom he had long been attached and who was every way worthy him, but with whom his poverty had prevented his previously being united: he now dwells in Massachusetts, beloved and respected by a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

PLUNDER OF INDIA.—By the following account of the plunder which the British army obtained at the capture of Mooltan, it appears there is no lack of stimulus to the cupidity of the invaders of the Punjab:

"The treasures discovered in the subterranean chambers of the citadel appear to be altogether of oriental magnificence and of Asiatic profusion. Descending into the cavities in which the treasures of the fortress had been accumulated, the inspecting officer is said to have found opium, indigo, salt, sulphur and drugs of every description heaped together in endless profusion: enormous hoards of wheat on one hand, on the other almost inexhaustible stores of rice, sacks of ghee vessels brimming with their unctuous contents: bales upon bales of costly shawls and gorgeous silks: chest after chest crammed with scabbards blazing with gold and jewels: tiers of copper canisters filled to the brim with gold mohurs. My poor pen says, 'a correspondent of the Delhi Gazette,' cannot describe the variety of wealth displayed to the inquisitive eye. Tumbrils under strong guard, have been moving to and fro with gold coin all the day. And, in addition to this, three or four crores of specie were still known to be concealed beyond the amount already discovered—one crore of rupees being £1,000,000." All these have been given up as plunder to the army by the British general.

Col. R. M. Johnson.
The Frankfort correspondent of the Louisville Journal, in his letter of the 21st inst. has the following brief sketch of the main points in Col. Johnson's history:

The mortal remains of Richard M. Johnson were on yesterday deposited in the States mound in the Frankfort cemetery.

Col. Johnson was born in 1779. He received his education at Transylvania University. The law was chosen by him as his occupation, and the study of it commenced by him under Col. Geo. Nicholas, but he died before the completion thereof, and Hon. James Brown was his last preceptor. Col. Johnson commenced the practice of the law in Scott county, and was elected to the Legislature before he was 21 years old. At 23 he was elected to Congress. When the war of 1812 broke out he was a member of that body, but left for home, raised a battalion and marched to the frontier. He was disappointed in an opportunity for an engagement, and returned to his seat. On the adjournment of Congress he raised a regiment and marched to the border of the Ohio. In 1813 this regiment with the Colonel at its head, acted a distinguished part in the battle of Thunders. In 1814 he resumed his seat in Congress. In 1819 was elected to the U. S. Senate, and on the expiration of his term was unanimously re-elected. In 1836 he was elected Vice President of the United States. On the expiration of his term in that distinguished post, he retired to his farm in Scott county, and remained until he was elected, in 1841, to the Kentucky Legislature, and again in 1850, without opposition. In the discharge of this last duty he was overtaken by the hand of death.

Republicans are not ungrateful. The prominent trait in the character of Col. Johnson was his indomitable energy. The grand secret of the devotion of his friends was his confidence in his honesty, virtuous patriotism, and disinterested benevolence of heart. Brilliant talents of rare mental acquirements or endowments were not claimed for him. His honesty and bravery received ample recompense at the hands of his countrymen.

BAGGAGE FACTORY STOPPED.—We learned, yesterday, that the Fulton Bagging Factory stopped operations about a week since, throwing some 400 hands out of employ. The cause assigned is the high price of hemp, and it is thought business will not be resumed in this factory again for some three or four months.—Cin. Com.

Test votes taken by the Convention to revise the Constitution of Indiana, indicate that a clause will be inserted, prohibiting the immigration to that State of colored persons, and preventing them from purchasing property.

The Pork Trade.
We find nothing very important in our exchanges since our last issue, relative to the traffic in high, but give such extracts from abroad as may prove beneficial to the trade in this quarter. The Louisville Journal, of Friday, says:—Cin. Eng.

Hogs bring better prices in our market now than in Cincinnati. Four dollars was the figure yesterday, at which heavy hogs were held, and $3.75 was freely offered. We did not bear of any sales. A drove of 406 head was received here before last, but had not been sold at 10 o'clock this morning. We notice sales of green hams at $46, and learn also that this price was refused for a large lot. There have been killed at the house of Messrs. Maxcy & Co., since far about 3000 head.

From well informed sources we learn that it does not admit any longer a doubt that there is not only a great falling off in the number of hogs, but also in their quality. Hog slaughtering commenced at St. Louis on Monday. The intelligence quotes $3.75 and $3.25 at the extreme range of the market. Light hogs, weighing 200 pounds or less, $2.75 and $3. Those weighing 220 to 250 pounds or over, $2.35 to $2.50.

Over one thousand head of hogs, belonging to Jeremiah Beckner, passed through Rushville, Ind., a day or two since, en route for this city. In Rushville, they are selling at $2.60, gross.

The Figue (Ohio) Enquirer, discloses in follows on the packing prospect in that place:

The pork season has not yet fully set in, but we understand that arrangements are being made by some of our business men to enter pretty extensively in the business. We notice that a Cincinnati packer has been up here for several
